The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1,3-8 and 10 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Japanese Patent 8-197595 in view of Haydon et al. (US Patent 4,274,026).

Japanese Patent discloses a motor driven injection molding machine having a rotor stator to convert rotation of the rotor stator into linear motion of the screw 20.

While the ratio of the rotor versus the diameter of the stator is not disclosed as being greater than 3, Haydon discloses in column 4, line 25 et seq. the rotor length as being 4 to 1 relative to its diameter. This allows for substantial starting and stopping of the rotor. Using such information and Fig. 11 as a guide, the diameter of the rotor 25 was measured to be $14.5/16$ (0.90625) of an inch giving a length of the rotor to be 3.625 inches. The inside diameter of the stator 83,84 was measured to be 1.0625 inches giving a ratio of length of the rotor to the inside diameter of the stator to be about 3.411. Thus greater than 3.

Therefore, it would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made, to provide for a ratio of length of the rotor to the inside diameter of the stator to be greater than 3 to allow for substantial starting and stopping of the rotor.
